

DIANA RAAB

CREATE A REVOLUTION

Incite change,
look for a patch
of difficulty amongst the glistening clouds, hunt for a need unmet, or a journey you want to take.

Stretch your arms to the sky's glow, find peace within yourself offer a donut to the homeless, tap into the closet never opened and pull down old journals written before wrinkled foreheads and children expanding like spiders crafting their webs.

Sink your teeth into good books write the author to share your enthusiasm for their warm words which make your heart twitch and your muscles flex upon the seat which holds the oldest bones in your family all gone, as you sit in your senior position in the same way you were once the youngest and most boisterous of the group.

Teach the world how life circles and how change never really occurs it just begs for a new sunlight.

Let yourself go
be the one who they all talk about
when you are gone.
